

SILVER AND THE LAW.

Solicitor Gen. Aldrich has examined the law in relation to silver. In speaking of an opinion which had been filed years ago relative to the bond question, Aldrich says:

"I wrote the opinion myself. It had been called for in the usual way and the Attorney General desired me to prepare it. I am personally a believer in the single standard theory of finance and my education has led me rather to expect to find the authority inquired about, so I entered upon my search without adverse prepossessions. The conclusion I reached was that while authority undoubtedly existed under the resumption law of 1875 to issue bonds for the purpose of replenishing the Treasury's supply of coin, either gold or silver, there was nothing in the statute book authorizing the issue of such bonds for one class of coin alone."

"How was this affected by the act directing the reissue of redeemed greenbacks?"

"That did not affect it at all. The greenbacks, as I look at it, redeemable in coin, but whether gold or silver rests in the discretion of the Treasurer."

"At the time the Resumption Act was passed there was no silver in our coinage. Were not the coin bonds authorized by that act therefore inevitably gold bonds?"

"It is true that the resumption act was passed during the period of silver demonetization, but on the other hand the law was not made immediately operative. Its execution was set a good way off. It simply said in effect that on the 1st of January, 1879, the outstanding notes of the Government would be redeemable in coin; but it left any subsequent Congress to pass a repeal bill. No man was bound into making a contract on the strength of it, as would have been the case if the Act had been made operative at once. The Government, in short, did not put itself into a position where it would have been embarrassed in the repeal of the Act; such repeal had seemed desirable at the last moment. Everything was postponed to the first of January, 1879, at the earliest. Meanwhile the act of 1875 was passed restoring silver to its old monetary place. By the time, therefore that resumption began and the bonds authorized by the Act of 1875 were prepared to perform their function, and the two metals were on an even footing again in the eye of the law, and a coin bond thereafter issued was a coin bond, and nothing more or less."

TAHOE AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Mrs. E. P. Bradley, well-known in art circles both in this city and in New York, has been engaged for many months upon a large picture of Lake Tahoe. The canvass is 6x9 feet. The point of view is from the shore nearly opposite Mount Tallac. The drawings were made by the artist herself in the month of June last, a large part of the shore-line of the lake having been explored to find the best point for representation. What is first to be noted is the large way in which the artist has accomplished her work. Of course the breadth of canvass is ample. No satisfactory interpretation of the majesty of such scenery has ever been made in a small picture. There is a rocky foreground on the left, softened on the right by early June herbage, having a little dash of color. The middle distance is the grand sweep of the lake, placid in the afternoon of an early summer day. Then Mount Tallac rises in the background, showing the white crags on its side, which is a notable feature of the mountain in the summer season. The flocks of the mountain are streaked with snow, and the cap is softened by a humid atmosphere. Flakes of white vapor float high in the horizon. The two qualities most conspicuous are power of interpretation, with a soft atmosphere, which probably is more notable on early summer days. Of the many paintings of Lake Tahoe, it would be difficult to mention another which has more good qualities than this picture by Mrs. Bradley. It is fairly a triumph of good art. This picture will go to the Columbian Exhibition and will occupy a place in the Woman's Department. It will remain on exhibition for a few days at the art rooms of the Sanborn & Vail on Market street.—Bulletin,
